

16 April 2013

---

Canterbury Health Laboratories is furthering its contribution to the New Zealand research community.

Canterbury Health Laboratories have just had their first contribution to the New Zealand Laboratory Medicine Research Review published.

This laboratory focused publication is the first of its kind in New Zealand, and involves Pathologists and Medical Laboratory Scientists giving their opinion on recently published research articles written across a range of medical laboratory science disciplines.

Clinical Director Peter George says CHL undertakes a lot of its own and associated research through ties with the University of Otago and Clinical Studies groups.

He says this publication helps to point people in the direction of the most fascinating research currently being published, and sometimes which research publications to possibly avoid.

We have had a range of our staff contribute to the reviews, which have a broad range of appeal given the broad touch point laboratory medicine has across health in general. I would encourage anyone using lab testing services in their area to take a look.

For the latest review please visit www.chl.co.nz/news